CONGRESS TO GIVE CONSIDERATION TO EUROPE'S ACTIONS

This Comes Before Attention to Hoover's War Debts Request

ANTAGONISM IS VOICED

Leaders Cautious Over Proposal for "Temporary Adjustments"

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Consideration will be given to Europe's action on reparations revision and disarmament by Congress before giving its attention to the request of President Hoover for reconsideration of war debts.

It is most noticeable that leaders on Capitol Hill are being cautious over the proposal of the President for "temporary adjustments" of the debts owed to America. Antagonism was shown by many.

It was evident that until Europe showed good intentions on arms reductions at the approaching Geneva parley in February and until France indicated how far she is willing to go in slicing the German reparations there was no hope for congressional action.

Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho, chairman of the Foreign Relations committee, whose words will go a long way in the impending debts discussion, summed it up:

"I am not in favor of recreating the World Foreign Debt Commission. There is no business for it to transact. I do not see any evidence that Europe proposes to reduce armaments or that she proposes to adjust reparations upon any proper basis."

Somewhat similar sentiments have been voiced by Democratic leaders in the House.

Mr. Hoover said it was obvious that some of the European Nations could not pay their debts after the expiration of the moratorium next July 1. But that question is not agitating the congressional mind just now.

It is the belief of some leaders that the European Nations will go a long way before defaulting in their obligations. Also some believe there is little real intention on the part of some of the debtors to pay up in full their settlements with the United States anyhow, and that now is a time for a showdown on it.

Democrats and Republican Independents opposed the debt settlements now in effect on the ground that they were too lenient to the European Nations. However, Senator Borah told the French correspondents accompanying Premier Laval to this country that if France would cancel German reparations he would favor cancellation of the war debts owed to America by the Allies. He is still standing for that proposition.

All set for consideration of the moratorium in committee next week, the machinery of Congress really began working today, biting into the pile of stirring issues which the first week has brought forth.

Although ratification will not be accomplished by December 15, the House Ways and Means Committee intends to put the President's proposal through for action around Christmas time.

The Senate's Finance Committee will tackle the moratorium obliquely on Monday through an investigation of American holdings of foreign bonds. The House Appropriations Committee prepared to take on the big annual supply bills at the same time. More committee lineups were in prospect today, so the various economic relief measures could enter the mill.

Taxation will go under Democratic microscopes next week. The leaders are making up their minds now to some radical surgery on the Hoover-Mellon proposal for new and higher levies. They probably will offer a much lighter immediate burden, relying more on borrowing to meet the Government's need of cash.

Excise taxes, at least to the extent proposed by the Treasury, are in disfavor; so are the big raises on income taxes, particularly in the lower brackets. A good many Republicans have voiced similar ideas.

Big Gain Is Made In Collection of Gas Tax

HARRISBURG, Dec. 11.—The Department of Revenue today announced that in November it collected tax upon 38.6 per cent more gasoline than in the same month the year before.

The collection was on 116,341,694 gallons last month, as compared with 83,947,216 gallons in November, 1930.

The October collections were 10 per cent greater, the September increase was 32 per cent and the August increase 29 per cent compared to the same periods last year.

"The gasoline bootlegging industry," Dr. Clyde L. King, Secretary of Revenue, said "is now in the midst of a serious depression." This is due to administration of the law without fear of political reprisals and without political favor.

"In the last four months the land unit has patrolled 217,252 miles and stopped 6200 trucks loaded with gasoline, checking both source and destination. In the same period the water patrol cruised 7324 miles, stopped 161 boats and barges conveying gasoline, checking the source and destination of the cargo. A total of 60,655,297 gallons of gasoline has been checked."

"The value of the revenue patrol is recognized by the legitimate oil industry as being an effective agency in preventing the running of bootleg gasoline into the Commonwealth. Its vigilance will not be relaxed."

Collections of the Motor Vehicle Bureau from motor car and truck owners for 1932 license amounted to $3,421,897 on December 1, as compared with $3,718,973 on the date last year for 1931 licenses. There are 29,129 fewer passenger car owners who now have their new year's license plates than a year ago. On December 1st there were 224,963 cars registered for 1932 while on the same date in 1930 the number registered for 1931 was 245,032.

The number of commercial vehicles licensed for the new year on December 1, was 31,279, while a year ago the number was 33,312.

ADVISING AGAINST RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA BY UNITED STATES, REV. JOHN C. FINNEY SPEAKS TO ROTARIANS AT WEEKLY MEETING

Believes That Such Acknowledgment Would Mean Endorsement of Things Which Have Led to Moral Degradation of That North European Country

Advising against the recognition of Russia by the United States because in doing such America would be endorsing those things which have led to the moral degradation of that North European country, the Rev. John C. Finney gave an interesting word picture of Russia of today.

Dr. Finney is co-pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Germantown, and has travelled very extensively. He was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the Rotary Club here yesterday, coming as the guest of Rev. S. Brooks Knowton.

The speaker told the Rotarians that he travelled through Russia last summer, accompanied by an interpreter, and that he gained much valuable first-hand information, and saw what Communism is doing for that country. "The Czars of Russia first ran that country into the ground, and then came the great World War, when 9,000,000 Russian men were killed. Then anyone who wanted to went into Russia and took out anything they desired. This period was followed by one of Revolution, and then the years of starvation, dating from 1920 to 1922, caused untold misery and want among the inhabitants, driving them to killing each other for food. A period of exile followed next, when all of the former customs and habits were thrown out and something new installed to supplant them."

Dr. Finney said that we must not be mistaken in thinking that the leaders of Russia were weaklings. "They are strong characters and have been made such because of the generation of exiles who preceded them. Russia is a country without God and without conscience. Morality is a thing of the past."

Two-thirds of the population are peasants, living in conditions which would not be tolerated in any country where subjects are free. Their homes in the most part are log-cabin affairs, covered with a rough-like plaster substance. The roofs are of wheat straw, and thatched. Windows, if any, are small. Here the speaker explained that the Russians have a superstition feeling concerning an open window in the day time which they believe means death to children.

The beds are small wooden platforms, slightly elevated above the floor level. Animals and fowls of the peasants' farms are often taken into the living quarters for shelter, and it is not an unusual thing to find a hog trough attached to and made a part of the sleeping platform. The Czars of Russia always kept the peasants in ignorance, Rev. Finney stated.

Everything today in Russia is in military terminology. The youth movement is one of the greatest in the world, and embraces boys and girls.

AT CHRISTMAS TIME THOSE SEEKING FOR GIFTS CAN GET MUCH JOY FROM MINGLING WITH HAPPY CROWDS OF SHOPPERS WHICH THROG STREETS

This Happiest Season of the Year Recalls the Time of Minstrelsy and Heralds of Old—Gladness is Brought to Hearts in Joyful Music

By "Gift Seeker"
The time of minstrelsy! So Christmas seems to be. Each year we hear so much about the minstrels and heralds of old who brought cheer and gladness in the form of song, and gay music seems so appropriate at Christmas time—the happiest season of the year.

We who love to shop, I believe, enjoy some of the most joyful Christmas joys, as we mingle in the crowds of men, women and children, and hear the merry notes of the jolly voices and tuneful melody of the bells of the street Santa Claus.

My first stop down-town today was at the Mill street store of Factors-to-You Furniture Company. The display window is bordered with shadow lamps, anywhere from a few inches to over a foot in height, with various shapes and styles. In among the many pieces of furniture are lamps, floor, bridge and table; as well as other miscellaneous items. Ship models always interest me, and Factors-to-You have some fine ones, which will make nice gifts. As Dad's gift to mother, which he asked me to select, I chose a boudoir chair covered in green silk.

The material is attractively figured in the same tone of green. And how comfortable! Wait till Ma spies it!

OPPOSE CREDIT EXTENSION

Washington, D. Opposition to further reduction in the debts was confined to go party and no group. It broke through the party lines and embraced all factions, Democratic, Republican and Progressive.

3-FEATURE PROGRAM ENTERTAINS FATHERS

Girl Magician and Polar Region Explorers Relate Their Experiences

MANY ATTEND MEETING

A big three-feature program was presented at the meeting of the Fathers Association held last night and each feature proved to be a top-notch in itself. There was "Robert," the girl magician who was so ably supported by her sister, Marion; Ray Myers, chief radio operator of the Nautilus and Frank Crilley, deep-sea diver, who accompanied the Nautilus to the polar regions.

"Robert" and her sister held the audience spell-bound as she performed her tricks of magic. The school children stared with open mouths and wide-eyes as they saw her draw a live rabbit from the coat of one of their number and the lad carried it away as a gift from Robert.

The magician mystified even the oldest folks in attendance and many of them eagerly watched every move. Roberta made in an effort to solve her illusions.

Ray Myers and Frank Crilley, both gave interesting talks of their experiences aboard the Nautilus. Myers was the first speaker. Myers was selected by Sir Hubert Wilkins, head of the hazardous expedition. He had been in the U. S. Navy for 16 years and had been doing radio research work for 20 years.

It was Radio Operator Vestrer who located the ocean liner, Vestris several years ago as it was sinking in the Atlantic. Locating the ship by means of the delicate radio compass, Meyers saved the lives of those aboard the sinking ship.

"We started from Camden with two strikes on us. We lost one radio operator overboard. Crossing of the Atlantic Ocean was the worst part of the entire trip. We had two radio sets, one that would reach around the world and the other for a distance of fifty miles.

"I say we had two strikes on us when we started, for we had lost one man and shortly afterward one of the engines of the Nautilus blew out. The big radio set was of no use to us and the small fifty-mile set could not reach our convoy ship.

"We continued on one engine, and the seas grew rougher and rougher. Finally the 'juice' of the radio sets became weaker and weaker and the lights of the Nautilus were practically gone.

"After tuning for twenty-six hours straight I was able to get in touch with a ship. This was done by bringing into use every known experiment and test that I had made in radio research in fifteen years. The Battleship Wyoming came to our assistance and relieved us. They shot a tow line to us and after considerable difficulty we hooked fast. During this process, one member of our crew was swept off the deck of the Nautilus by a wave the height of an ordinary house-top and in the same roll was swept back on deck several feet from where he had been standing. I had heard about this kind of thing for years in the Navy, but always thought it was a fish story. This time I actually saw it happen.

"Everything went fine for a time until we started experimenting with our engine and finally started up the incapacitated one. This made the crew of the Wyoming rather peeved and they warned us if we kept on doing that sort of thing they would let us go. Finally they did. We continued for a time and the engine again went out of commission and we had lost sight of the Wyoming.

We went on deck to flash signal lights for assistance. I will never forget one experience I had on my turn on watch. As I was coming out on deck to crawl into the conning tower of our small submarine, I noticed that (Continued on Page 4)

YEADON RESIDENT ACQUITTED; AUTO ACCIDENT CASE

Edgar Dodson Was Charged With Operating Car While Intoxicated

COSTS ON THE COUNTY

Wife Seriously Hurt When Machine Crashed Into High Wall

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 11.—A 26-year old husband whose wife was described as "a naughty girl" by State Senator Clarence J. Buckman, of Langhorne, who represented him in criminal court, was acquitted yesterday of a charge of operating his automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and the jury, with a woman foreman, placed the costs on the county.

The defendant was Edgar Dodson, of Yeadon, Delaware County, chauffeur for an oil concern. His automobile crashed into a high wall surrounding "Aldie," the William R. Mercer estate on North Main street, Doylestown, on the early morning of October 29. A hole twenty feet wide was rammed into the twelve-foot high wall.

In the accident, Mrs. Elizabeth Dodson, pretty brunette wife of the defendant, was seriously injured, and Dodson was slightly injured. The automobile was completely wrecked. Mrs. Dodson was a hospital patient for several weeks.

The case was tried before Judge Calvin S. Boyer and the Commonwealth was represented by District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, while Senator Buckman represented Dodson.

Two of the Commonwealth's six witnesses, including Dr. Claude L. Taylor, Doylestown, and Highway Patrolman William Reimpp, testified that Dodson was intoxicated in their opinion.

Dr. Taylor examined Dodson at his office after Dodson left the Doylestown Emergency Hospital, and there found him to be, he said, "without a doubt, under the influence of intoxicating liquor."

In his own defense, Dodson took the witness stand yesterday afternoon. He told the court and jury that he left his home in Yeadon about 11.30 p. m. to drive to Point Pleasant.

"I learned that my wife had gone to her mother's home. When I arrived there I found that she was in the midst of a drinking party. I was very mad at the time and I walked in the house and took her out into the car, pulling her out because she at first refused to get up when I asked her to come with me.

"It was raining that night and it was very foggy. I argued with my wife until we reached Danboro. Then when we came down the pike near Doylestown, I had an accident. I was knocked unconscious for a time and I do not know just exactly what happened. Instead of going around a curve I went straight on and hit the wall. I was injured on the head and shoulders and my car was wrecked. My wife was very much injured. I believe that my wife was intoxicated when I found her at the party in her mother's home at Point Pleasant.

"I certainly was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor and had not taken a drink that night. I was (Continued on Page 4)

EVERYDAY PSYCHOLOGY

It is interesting to observe the increasing application of the principles of psychology to the solution of problems of everyday life. The science of the mind, once looked upon as a frill of education, now plays an important part in affairs of business. Recourse is had to it, just as to physics, chemistry, mathematics, economics and other sciences, in smoothing out all sorts of difficulties. In the army during the war psychologists were employed to test the intelligence of recruits, so that the right men might be fitted to the multifarious jobs to be done. Psychology is now being similarly applied to the world of commerce. Business men have faith in what they are told as to how psychology will help them to improve the personnel of their employes by making it possible for them to avoid the mistake of putting square pegs in round holes.

The importance of the study now being made of the mind will be more appreciated in later years, for as yet researchers have done little more than scratch the surface. Up until the last century there was little accurate knowledge of the processes of the mind. The phenomena of memory, dreams, somnambulism and hypnotism had been observed but either ignored or attributed to supernatural agencies. It was only recently that there was put forward the hypothesis of "the subliminal consciousness" to account for faculties sometimes exhibited by persons while in an abnormal condition which were beyond their power while in a normal state. The theory now generally accepted, is that there is present in all persons a region of the mind which, though the dominant or controlling part, usually lies hidden or submerged beneath more commonplace mental activities. This has been hailed as one of the greatest discoveries of modern science, and is the basis of which faith healing, the power of suggestion and hypnotism rest.

Psychology is teaching now how to educate the will, stimulate the imagination, improve the memory, form good habits and get rid of bad ones. As man learns more of the operations of the subconscious part of the mind, he increases his mental powers.

There is another department of psychology which has been brought into undeserved disrepute by the frauds of charlatans, but which is the most fascinating of all branches of the science in the possibilities that it seems to hold. This is the branch which Sir Oliver Lodge calls "psychic science." It is concerned with investigation of the thesis that mind may exist apart from matter. Without prejudice and without superstition scientists have been engaged for a number of years in critical examination of facts which have been bearing on the question.

Psychology is the big science of the Twentieth Century, just as biology was dominant in the Nineteenth; and it is encouraging to find business men interested in it because of the help that it offers in the solution of their problems, and the public turning an attentive ear to the teachers because of the aid that knowledge of the mind's workings gives in acquiring mental and physical health.

SYNOPSIS

While the newboys shouted, "All about the big gang killing," Fanchon Meredith and a man named Tony planned their getaway. Tony gives Fanchon $4,000 and reserves passage for her under the name of "Miss Smith" on an airplane chartered by the wealthy Mr. Eames en route to New York. A fellow passenger, whom she had previously met on the boat coming from Hawaii, recognizes Fanchon.

CHAPTER II

Mrs. Eames was getting herself settled with jerky gestures. "You know each other," she beamed. "You now nice!" Her manner was very unkind tea. The girl called Miss Smith who had just been addressed as Fanchon Meredith murmured something. She had flushed and her heart was beating unsteadily. The other girl supplied the date.

"Of course," we came to San Francisco from Hawaii on the same boat, months ago," she said, and added reproachfully, "Why didn't you look me up, you said you could!"

Fanchon Meredith lifted her turquoise blue eyes, briefly—

"I've been so busy..." she said. "So have I—only imagine," the other girl began when suddenly there was a shout... a call... high, clear, triumphant, after the field-nay's signal.

Contact!

The engines turned over, the plane skimmed the ground, rose without a jar. "Well!" said Mrs. Eames, spreading her skirts. "Great, isn't it?" her husband asked her, and added, "worth the money."

The girl sitting in the next air chair to Fanchon jerked her head toward the rest of the party.

"Know them?" she asked.

Fanchon indicated that she did not.

"How strange," said Fanchon's chance acquaintance, "that we should meet again here... on such a trip."

She giggled, nervously. "There was a girl about your own height and build, rather mouse-like, with blue eyes and dark brown hair and a small, prim mouth..." "I have to pinch myself that it's actually I—Evelyn Howard!" she added.

She's Mrs. Allison Carstairs," said Evelyn importantly and stopped, waiting Fanchon's word of astonishment.

"Carstairs?" asked Fanchon puzzled, and uninterested.

Evelyn made an excited gesture. "Haven't you heard of her...? She's always in the papers," she said...

...she has oodles of money, goes everywhere, knows everyone. You see when my mother, who was much younger than Aunt Jennie, ran off with my father, the family cut her off, they wouldn't have anything to do with her. Poor Dad, he was a struggling Professor of English and mother had been presented at Court and all the rest of it and was supposed to make a good marriage. Later, before mother died Aunt Jennie, the only one left of the family, tried to make overtures. But mother was proud and Dad wouldn't let her be anything else. Then after Dad's death I went to school teaching. And now, Aunt Jennie is back, after all these years and wants me to make my home with her. She traced me, easily enough, and sent for me to come East. She wired me money and told me to come as quickly as I could as she had plans for me. So—I decided to fly. I've always wanted to make a long flight."

"You've never seen her?" asked Fanchon curiously, roused out of herself by the girl's story.

"No. Not she me. Not even a good photograph. All she knows is that I have dark hair and blue eyes. I wrote her that much. It's hard to describe myself," said Evelyn self-consciously and I didn't have even a decent snapshot except the one taken of the two of us on the boat... do you remember? I sent that one," she said.

She drew a deep breath. "No more teaching," she said, "no more—anything. I'm so happy," confessed Evelyn.

Fanchon looked at her. She envied her to the bottom of her soul. This girl was flying toward happiness. Toward something more than happiness, toward peace, safety, security, toward people of her own, someone to whom she belonged, who would care for her. Fanchon felt her heart constrict with anguish. Happiness meant so little. She had been happy, for a while, with Tony, meeting the dark, ardent eyes, listening to the deep, ardent voice, seeing him smile, feeling his strong, brown hand—Tony's hand... she shuddered to think of it now—upon her own feeling his lips on hers. Tony's lips which had cracked and cracked their way through life.

And she... she was flying toward what? Hiding... shrinking from the glance of every stranger, she who had once met every eye with her chin up and her own eyes clear. Flying to escape, flying to get away... a coward, a quitter, a shirker. But Tony had said she must.

"You mustn't get mixed up in this, kid. You don't know anything. But all the same, you know too much. Tony's girl. They've all seen you. They'll look for you. You've got to get away. It's safer for you. And for me. And Rosie's on the war path!" said Tony.

Rosie, she had been Tony's girl once. Until Fanchon came on the scene, innocent, gay-hearted, accepting everything, even Tony, at face value.

Evelyn went on talking. About teaching in the very good, rather dull school. About the days back in Hawaii. "Funny, I never knew you then, Fanchon."

"Not so funny," Fanchon replied mechanically, "I was buried on a plantation most of my life you know. I rarely came to Honolulu." She was silent, remembering the sun-steeped days and her father, who had been her friend, her guide, her teacher. Everything to her. She could not remember her mother. Only her father, her companion for twenty happy years, years which had run past swiftly and silently as sand from an hourglass.

The young man in the Eames party spoke to Evelyn, his eyes on Fanchon as he did so. The elderly woman leaned forward and said, nervously, "I do hope I'm not going to be air sick!" The steward came from his mysterious, small quarters and started serving bouillon and sandwiches and answering the questions flung at him. In a very short space of time all the occupants of the cabin-plan seemed to draw together and become friends, as if their common adventure made conspirators of them.

"Oh!" said Evelyn, "isn't it exciting?"

The air was rough, for the moment. The sky was partly clouded over and it was very warm. Heat bumps were noticeable and Evelyn squealed in her rather simpering fashion. "Just like a scenic railway!" she commented. Mrs. Eames turned slightly green and regarded the sandwich she held in her hand with an expression of fixed distaste.

The steward looked anxious. "Is this your first flight, Miss Smith?" asked the Eames boy. Fanchon did not answer. When he repeated his question, she started and flushed, looking toward Evelyn. But Evelyn was chattering with Mr. Eames and had not heard.

"Yes," replied Fanchon, briefly.

"You are awfully calm about it!" Roger Eames remarked, smiling.

She looked out of the window at the tremendous vista beyond and about and below them. She nodded, without speaking. Queer girl, he thought, turning to Evelyn. Much better looking than the other, but difficult. He disliked difficult women.

Calm? Fanchon smiled, secretly. Once, it would have meant so much to her, the sense of flight, the feel of wings. It meant nothing now save... escape. Only that. She had a sudden sickening mental vision of Tony in police headquarters. Handcuffs. Would they handcuff him... on suspicion? She heard them questioning him... she saw his brown face pale a little and his dark eyes glitter with menace.

But perhaps they wouldn't catch him. He'd said they wouldn't. "The dick doesn't live who can put the iron on me!" he'd boasted to her in that appalling hour of revelation.

"I'll get away!"

Where had he gone? To whom? Rosie, who had loved him, who was now his enemy. He was surrounded by enemies. Fanchon clenched her small fists until the nails bit into her palms. Why had she run away? She had a moment's impulse to cry out, like a mad woman, "Turn back, take me back, I say you must!" How they would look and stare and murmur among themselves, the fat, complacent Eames and his fat, air-sick wife—and his lean, sleek-tailed son with whom Evelyn was giggling in her idiotic fashion. They would think she had gone crazy. Well, she had.

No. No. She couldn't help Tony in any way. The most she could do for him was to disappear, take the burden of one more worry from his shoulders. She owed him that much, for she had loved him. Or had thought so. Even all that had happened since could not efface the fact of her once having loved him...

ARTISTIC JOB THAT OF "LIGHTING UP" THE GOWNS OF BLACK

White Only Serious Rival of Black for Winter Evening Gown

By Alice Langelier

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Dec. 11—The old saying that "black or white is always right, is an important slogan of the French dressmaker even in this season of very gay colors. For French women in general have always had an unflinching fondness for black, knowing that it is both beautifully becoming as well as economical.

White is the only serious rival of black for the winter evening gown, and the women who are most enthusiastic about the all-white frock make a point also of having at least one really smart black evening gown.

A great deal of attention is being given to the "lighting up" of the black gowns which means a very subtle touch such as cascade draperies in tulle used by Jeanne Lanvin on a picturesque black model with a floral design in strass gleaming on the all-black corsage.

Maggy Rouff "lights up" a black velvet with a youthful arrangement of Irish lace in half flounces on the skirt and a festooned pearl ornament on the bodice.

A black georgette with a new scarf drapery has a gleaming diamante buckle and another in black lace obtains its lighting from the wearer's white arms, for it has detachable elbow sleeves made of black lace.

A beautiful all-white evening gown is slimly-moulded with a vivid scarlet flower at the waist-line.

Yeadon Resident Acquitted; Auto Accident Case

dazed after the accident and was nauseated in the Doylestown Hospital.

Cross-examined by District Attorney Eastburn, Dodson said that when he found his wife intoxicated at the party, he grabbed her and dragged her out of the house, and put her in the car.

"I was driving about 30 or 35 miles an hour on my way home," Dodson said in answer to the District Attorney's question. "I did not see the turn in the highway. I could hardly see 20 feet in front of me at times, it was so foggy."

"Yes, I might have been going more than 35 miles an hour, but the wall that I hit was not concrete, it was a hollow tile wall."

"I remember being examined by Dr. Taylor."

"I had no bottle of whiskey with me on the trip from Yeadon to Point Pleasant, and before leaving Yeadon that night I was with my father and baby."

The defendant's wife, Elizabeth, still showing some effects of the accident in which she miraculously escaped death, testified that her husband was not drunk. She admitted that she had taken several drinks at the Point Pleasant party. She admitted that her husband was angry and scolded her but she testified that she was certain that he had not been drinking.

James B. Garnis, father-in-law of Dodson, testified that when Dodson left Yeadon he was perfectly sober.

Margaret Carnis, at whose home the party was staged in Point Pleasant, also testified that Dodson was not drunk when he came after his wife.

Behind the Scenes in Hollywood

By HARRISON CARROLL.

Copyright, 1931, Premier Syndicate, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 10.

Christmas customs of many nations will be celebrated by Hollywood's foreign colony this year.

Clive Brook will entertain a group of English friends with a midnight buffet supper on Noel eve. Eight singers have been engaged to render Christmas carols.

There'll be a plum pudding made a month before serving.

After the Hungarian fashion, Paul Lukas will have a scanty but ceremonious meal on Christmas eve. This includes wine soup, grilled carp, walnut-cake roll and apples.

On Christmas day, however, there'll be a big feast at noon-time featuring pig-soup with vinegar, roast duck, roast pig, sweet and sour red cabbage, and fried noodles with jelly and walnuts.

Because the French greet Christmas Eve with gay parties, Maurice Chevalier will hold open house for his friends. If he had any children, they would put their shoes on the door-step instead of hanging up their stockings. Adults over there have to wait until New Year's Eve to receive their gifts.

Following an old Spanish custom, Conchita Montenegro will attend the mass of the rooster at midnight Christmas Eve. Next day she'll sleep till noon (okay if you haven't any kids). It seems the Spanish are even more patient than the French about their presents.

While getting them on Xmas, they don't open them till the Feast of the Kings on Jan. 6.

At the home of Ramon Novarro, Christmas Eve is an occasion for reverence. Gifts are exchanged, but they are placed around a carved image of the Christ child, instead of about a Christmas tree.

Jean Hersholt will entertain the Danish Consul and many friends from his native land. They'll vie to see who gets the nut in the rice porridge, which entitles the lucky one to an extra present.

Nils Asther will put a pair of wooden shoes out to attract the attention of the Swedish Kris Kringle.

And Marlene Dietrich will mix her American turkey with Dresden fish parties and baked noodles.

TAX-PAYER INSISTS ON RIGHTS.

Despite official disapproval everybody is having his radio fixed to tune in on the police broadcasts.

Jimmy Durante tells about the drunk who called up to say he was having guests over on Tuesday night and would the sergeant please have something especially good on the air.

LATEST GOSSIP.

Here's one to cause a lot of ears to burn. Marshall Neilan is writing a book about his twenty years' experiences and observations in Hollywood. What puzzles some people is how he will get it in one volume. . . . Tom Mix wants Tony to visit him in the hospital. He assures doctors that Tony will ride peacefully in elevators, and has rubber shoes. . . . Mrs. Don Alvarado will spend the Christmas holidays with Dolores Del Rio and Cedric Gibbons. . . . Who gave the ruby ring and the two diamond bracelets to Genevieve Tobin? . . . Ramon Novarro signed that new contract last week. It calls for him to star and to direct.

HERE'S NOVELTY.

Always well to the fore with new ideas, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has made a Christmas short in which many of the company's stars appear. It starts out with Jackie Cooper inviting eleven kids on a football team to a party. Like many other Hollywood parties, it grows into a mass-meeting and they have to move into a sound stage.

There they find Jimmy Durante as Santa Claus and Wallace Beery carving turkey. Many other stars appear.

DID YOU KNOW?

That Greta Nissen has a young brother studying sculpturing in New York?

Next came Margaret Nagel, a sister-in-law, who attended the party. She too testified that Dodson was sober.

That Dodson was always sober while he worked for him, was the testimony of Edwin N. Note, of Yeadon, who is in the oil business. Dodson is a chauffeur and cannot be a drinking man, Note testified.

Chief of Police Earl H. Allen, of Yeadon, who has known Dodson for five years, testified that the defendant's reputation for sobriety and for being a peaceful and law-abiding citizen, is "very good."

Miss Lillian Peacock, a telephone operator, who goes to the Dodson home on social visits on numerous occasions, said that she never saw Yeadon take a drink.

Miss Alice Hause, who was a Commonwealth witness, was called in rebuttal by the Commonwealth but her testimony was stricken out on motion of Senator Buckman. Miss Hause, who was a member of the Point Pleasant party, testified in rebuttal that she had known Dodson for some time and that she knew that he takes a drink now and then at small social gatherings of his friends.

In his argument to the jury, Senator Buckman described Mrs. Dodson as "the wife who was a bad, naughty girl," and the husband as the "hubby that did what any other decent husband would have done, to go out and get his wife when he knew that she was on a party."

Senator Buckman argued that Dodson was not drunk, but that he was suffering from concussion of the brain.

"And I want to say something about intoxication," the Senator continued. "I have always contended that I can, or any other layman can tell, just as well as a physician, whether a man is drunk or sober enough to drive an automobile."

The jury deliberated but thirty minutes and returned a verdict of "not guilty," placing the costs on the county.

"LITTLE SISTER"By Marie Lathrop
Andalusia

Do you remember, little sister,
When you and I were kids;
How we bottled up grasshoppers
And mocked the katydids?

At night we'd have to sleep
In a room both dark and cold;
And oh! What awful dreams I had!
Of snakes and robbers bold.

Then I would make you 'waken,
And either by bribe or threat,
You'd have to entertain me
'Til back to slumber I'd get.

Often you'd keep on talking—
Didn't know I was sound asleep;
Next morning you'd tell me plenty,
But not a word to Ma would you peep.

'Twas really a shame how I teased
you,
Squeezed your hand 'til you'd have to kneel;
But you were a spunky little sister—
Held on 'til you'd nearly reel.

How we fought at washing dishes!
And often Dad would say:
"If you girls keep on arguing
A different tune you'll play."

And that just makes me remember,
How you and I used to try
To sing odd tunes together—
Some harmony, between you and I.

We always longed for Springtime,
Hurried right home from school,
Took off our shoes and stockings,
To let our bare feet cool.

Our hair, we wore in pigtails,
Tied tight with ribbons gay;
Whenever we happened to lose one,
We went without next day.

Once I was so embarrassed
When my very bestest beau
Said he was going to kiss me
When he caught me in the snow.

'Course you were tagging behind me,
And I knew you'd hurry to tell
Mamma and Dad all about it—
That's when I used to yell.

It sure did make me peevish

Whenever I wanted to play;
"Take Bessie and William with you,"
Our mother would firmly say.

Then there was the old wooden wash
tub,
Hauled in on Saturday night;
Beginning with the youngest, we took turns,
And bathed by the dim lamplight.

There wasn't lots of nickles,
For we three kids to spend,
But we were just as happy
As kids of today, in the end.

Now we are grown, little sister,
Have babes of our own to raise;

But life is a little bit brighter,
When we think of our childhood days.

Now isn't it fun, little sister,
To remember when we were kids,
How we bottled up grasshoppers
And mocked the katydids.

Mrs. Philip Gokler and daughter,
Miriam, of Yardley; and Mrs. Harold Tomlinson, of Fallsington, were Saturday guests of Mrs. Gokler's relatives, Mr. and Mrs. John Sharp, of DiBernardo, and Mrs. DiBernardo's nephew and niece, of New York, were week-end visitors at the home of Mrs.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Pieters, of North Radcliffe street, entertained over the week-end, Mr. and Mrs. Chas.
Walsh and son, Donald, of Flushing,
Long Island.

Elwood Watt, of 354 Lafayette

HOW TO BALANCE GLASS ON PLAYING CARD

Place a glass on top edge of playing card held in hand, holding face of card toward the audience, meanwhile balancing glass with forefinger of hand as shown in above drawing. Finger is hidden by card from audience, and it appears that glass is actually being balanced on edge of card.

TO REVIVE STRATEGY
IN BASEBALL IN 1932By James L. Kilgallen
L. N. S. Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—A return to strategy in baseball, involving the almost lost art of base stealing, is indicated for 1932, judging from the happening of the 1931 season and in the World Series.

The "good old days" of smart playing are to be revived and less stress placed on pure slugging which has been so much in vogue in recent years.

"Pepper" Martin's feat in almost beating the Philadelphia A's single handed by his base running combined with his hitting has set the managers of both the National and American Leagues to thinking—and the managers of the smaller circuits as well. Martin's scintillating skill on the base paths demonstrated conclusively that base running is one of the most important phases of any club's attack and the managers will act accordingly in planning their strategy in 1932.

The Brooklyn National League club will be led next year by Max Carey, a great base runner in his prime, and it is a certainty that this team, for one, will no longer depend upon heavy hitting alone, but will go into the more subtle forms of winning ball games, including base running.

Base running has been so neglected that when a player does good work on the paths he is a standout, as witness the case of Ben Chapman whose feat of stealing 61 bases in 1931 was one of the features of the season in the American League.

Pitchers next year will have to watch the men on the bags more closely than any time in years. The "old army game" involving the hit and run play has been in vogue so long in the big leagues that even the best of pitchers have been careless in watching men on bases.

The "hot stove league" is now in full blast and a lot of water will have gone over the dam before the teams go South and West for the spring training. But you can bank on one thing: 1932 will see better base running than any season in years.

Fans are speculating on changes that will take place before the big league clubs line up for the 154-game grind next season. The New York Yankees have purchased the Newark Club of the International League as a result. Rumors are current that the Brooklyn club may buy an International League franchise—and other big league clubs are looking with favor upon the idea of having one or more "farms." It no longer is enough to have a good scouting system.

Dan Howley, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, is said to be angling for the services of Wally Roettger, the Cardinal outfielder.

Low Fonseca, new manager of the White Sox, succeeding Donie Bush, will make valiant efforts to pull his club out of the cellar and will not hesitate to make changes to do so.

STATE NEWS

PITTSBURGH—Little did Meredith B. Reid think that the porter of the railroad train carrying him to the Canadian Rockies two or three years ago was a fugitive wanted for murder in Pittsburgh.

But he was, as Reid, Assistant District Attorney here, found in criminal court when he was called upon to prosecute the ex-porter, Fred Roberts, Negro.

For 18 years, Roberts had evaded Pittsburgh police, who had a warrant charging him with murder in connection with one of the first automobile fatalities recorded here. Roberts was the chauffeur of a car which ran down two women, killing one of them.

He fled Pittsburgh after the accident, going to Chicago where he has lived since, save for 18 months in France as a member of the A. E. F.

Recently, Roberts had a quarrel with "his girl." The girl, to "get even" notified police here Roberts was a fugitive they sought. He was arrested, returned to Pittsburgh and tried on a charge of involuntary manslaughter.

The witnesses against him having died or disappeared, he was acquitted. As he left the courtroom, Roberts pointed to Reid and inquired:

"Who's that guy over there?"

Informed "that guy" was the prosecutor, Roberts chuckled. "Couple of years ago I was the porter on his train in Canada."

Reid, remembering, verified the trip and the two held a reunion of a sort.

HOW TO MAKE ONE MATCH PASS THROUGH ANOTHER

AS MATCHES ARE BROUGHT TOGETHER, ONE IS RAISED FROM THUMB - MAKING GAP THROUGH WHICH OTHER MATCH PASSES.

Hold two matches, one in each hand, with the head between the index and middle finger and the tail pressed against the thumb. Bring the matches together, crosswise to each other, and as you do so release the thumb of one hand, making a tiny gap through which the other match passes. With a little practice this can be done quickly and it looks to the bystanders as though one match actually passes through the other. The large or phosphorus type of match should be used.

GEORGIA'S CAPTAIN!

THE most sensational football season in a generation will come virtually to a close on Saturday, December 12, when Georgia and the cohorts of the University of Southern California line up for the kickoff in Los Angeles. The big Trojan war-horse, victor over Hunk Anderson's men of Notre Dame, will gallop confidently after new laurels at the expense of the boys from Dixie. But the Georgia Bulldog, captained by the aggressive and versatile Austin Downes, aided and abetted by the inimitable "Catfish" Smith, will be in there all afternoon, springing for the nose and neck and biting at the fetlocks of the Trojan Dobbin.

On the records of both teams, U. S. C. ought to win right handily. Coach Howard Jones has had his powerful machine in high gear ever since that inexplicable September defeat at the hands of little St. Mary's. Stanford, California, Oregon, to mention only the more powerful aggregations of the Coast Conference, were turned back with ease by the Trojan avlanche before the epic struggle at South Bend.

Then, the U. S. C. boys stacked up, in the pre-game dope, as underdogs against Schwartz, Sheeketski, Jaskwich, Yarr, Krausse and Co.; they were behind at the end of the third quarter, by 14 to 0. Then, against what had been heralded as the "greatest of all Notre Dame teams," Musick, Shaver, Williamson, Mohler and the rest of the Trojans came back to do the unbelievable—score more than a point a minute against the "Irish," to win in the final minutes of play by a well-placed dropkick, 16 to 14.

U. S. C. adherents may argue that Georgia could not have done that. Georgia adherents answer that no one looked for the Trojans to do it either. The fact is that Georgia, coached by Harry Mehre, is a powerful team. It is a smart team, one of the smartest. Its line, while overpowered by Tulane, charges harder than most. With a man like "Catfish" Smith to break through consistently, slip through a flying wedge of interference and throw opposing runners for five and ten yard losses—with such a man on the defense; and with such a superb field general as Downes, who is, incidentally, a dashing ball carrier, a passer, a blocker and a fierce tackler; with such sturdy blockers and runners as Chandler and Dickens; and with a rip-slashing, rough and tumble plunger like Roberts, Georgia is well equipped to meet any team in the land. Especially when Harry Mehre has in the background a constant threat of commotion like "Half-Pint" Homer Key, whose broken-field running this year has confounded most of the Bulldog's foes, Yale especially. Key out-Boothed Abbie Booth at the "Mighty Mite's" own specialty.

Perhaps the most-watched individual stars will be Jim Musick, for U. S. C., and Austin Downes, for Georgia. Musick, the giant—the Trojan Horse; Downes, the tight-knit midge—the snarling Dixie Bulldog. Anything may happen, and after the starting whistle blows everything in the football category probably will.

FIRST SEAL SALE WAS STARTED 25 YEARS AGO

Promoted by Miss Emily P. Bissell, for Tuberculosis Hospital

HELPING GREAT FIGHT

The first Christmas Seal sale in the United States was promoted 25 years ago by Miss Emily P. Bissell, of Wilmington, Delaware, to raise money for a tuberculosis hospital on the banks of the Brandywine river. That first sale mainly centered about Philadelphia so that Pennsylvania was closely associated with the beginning of this project.

Ever since, Miss Bissell has been identified with the campaign against tuberculosis both in her home state and in the nation. During this time she has witnessed the inroads on the disease but there is a great deal left to do, for tuberculosis is still the leading cause of death among persons between 15 and 45 years of age.

At the last annual meeting of the National Tuberculosis Association Miss Bissell and Leigh Mitchell Hodges, of Philadelphia, were guests of honor at a session held to commemorate the 25th Christmas Seal sale. Mr. Hodges, who was connected with the Philadelphia North American, saw the possibilities of the Seal then and was largely responsible for the publicity given the little sticker and helped greatly in getting the idea started. Miss Bissell explained how she came to adopt this means of raising money.

"It was not a sudden inspiration or detached idea," she said. "I had been looking for something of the sort for years. I went into volunteer social work in my teens, serving on boards and committees, and I had learned that it is comparatively easy to get five and ten dollar subscriptions. It is also possible, if the confidence of the community is obtained, to get fairly large contributions, into the thousands of dollars. But the real difficulty is to gain the participation of the huge general public, who should be reached in any cause where popular education and co-operation are needed.

"I never found the answer to this question until I read an article by Jacob Riis describing a Christmas Seal which the Danish government sold like stamps in the post offices for the benefit of a children's sanatorium. Einar Holboell, a post-office clerk, originated the idea, and it had been unusually successful."

Miss Bissell described how she consulted the best advertising men she could find. All prophesied failure. Yet the large stores in Philadelphia came in. Led by the North American, the newspapers opened their columns, and the sale was permitted in post offices and other public places. The following year the sale was extended throughout the nation, still against the advice of advertising men who considered the success of the first campaign to be due to novelty.

A picture of life and hope is seen today by Miss Bissell:

"As I look at the Christmas Seal today I see the hordes of people who had no hope, and who have it now.

"I see thousands of doctors and nurses alert to help and save life.

"I see thousands of little children, crippled and sickly, who have never had a chance for health and strength before.

"I see millions of great, generous American people, rich and poor, upon whom we can rely to carry the Christmas Seal and the work it presents forward year by year."
